

I don't understand the need for mandated competition for new broadband services in the telephone companies. Plenty of competition exists between cable companies, phone companies, satellite and wireless. To mandate that the telephone companies open their networks to offer broadband to consumers, but not the other forms of broadband, cable companies in particular, is unfair and unjust. There needs to be broadband parity.